Excerpt: . . . as (0. ) The Son of God, Who rises through His own power. Resurrexit, non est hic: videte locum ubi posuerunt eum. The Gospel announces this fact: Christ Himself announces it in the Introit. The Church puts the words of Psalm 138 in a proper and deeply significant sensus accommodatus, into the mouth of the risen Christ Who announces His own deed. Christ announces Himself solemnly as the victorious Son of God. He addresses, as it were, at His resurrection, the Father in Heaven and man on earth in the words: resurrexi et adhuc sum tecum, alleluja: I rose up (oh God!) and am still with Thee (in spite of the dreadful suffering and death, united to Thee, oh God!) Alleluia! Thou hast placed thine omnipotent hand upon me! Alleluia. Wonderful is thy wisdom, thy divine knowledge, thine intelligence, thy plan and thy designs (in my resurrection). Alleluia, alleluia! Lord, Thou hast proved me (in suffering and in death). But Thou hast known me (the Son of God and the Son of Man). Thou hast known my rest (in the grave) and my resurrection. In the Messianic resurrection the Divine glory, the hand of the Father and of the Son is revealed. The Father raises the Son by His all-powerful hand, that all may believe in Him; this is for Him the greatest testimony of the Father. The Son Himself arises, through His own power, because He is God and just through...
